HOME

VICTORIA

A-frame house is an architectural masterpiece that captures the essence of modern simplicity and rustic charm. Its iconic triangular shape, with a steeply sloping roofline that stretches to the ground, gives the home a bold and instantly recognizable silhouette. The exterior combines natural materials like cedar wood cladding and large expanses of glass, allowing the home to blend seamlessly into its wooded or mountainous surroundings. The A-frame design not only offers visual appeal but is also perfect for withstanding heavy snow or rain, making it ideal for a variety of climates.

From Efficiency to Durability: The Many Benefits of ICF Construction

When planning a new construction project, you've probably come across ICF blocks as a potential building material. Many people are unfamiliar with ICF (Insulated Concrete Forms) and its multitude of benefits. ICF blocks result in buildings that are incredibly strong, energy-efficient, and easy to maintain for decades to come.

What Are ICF Blocks?

ICF blocks consist of two 16" x 48" panels of foam insulation, held together with ties that form a hollow space between the sheets. The blocks connect together and are stacked on top of each other on a job site to form a wall. Once the blocks are in place, rebar is placed in the hollow space between the blocks and concrete is poured over the rebar. Once the concrete sets, the result is a steel-reinforced concrete wall with inner and outer layers of continuous insulation built in.

The Benefits of ICF Construction

Insulated concrete forms (ICFs) bring unique benefits to construction not seen with many other building materials. Here are some of the most notable benefits:

- Exhibition of high R-values (R-17 to R-26). In other words, a building constructed with ICFs will have minimal drafts because of the continuous air barriers and foam insulation, as well as a high thermal mass, reducing peak heating and cooling loads. This means that ICF homes see 40-70% energy savings when compared to a stick-frame home.
- Twice the sound resistance property of wood frames, achieving sound transmission classification of 50.
- No vapor barrier needed. ICFs are natural moisture barriers.
- ICF buildings are 8.5 times stronger than wood-framed buildings.
- Tornado, hurricane, and earthquake resistant.
- 75% reduction of outside air infiltration, meaning less allergens and dust inside.
- Environmentally-friendly. 1 ICF building saves at least 10 trees.
- Can be used in a variety of designs and finishes, such as brick, vinyl siding, stucco, and more.
- Heat resistant. In firewall tests, ICFs withstand exposure to intense temperature fires with barely any structural damage or no signs of failure. ICF homes regularly receive discounts on homeowners policies and insurances.
- Less need for repair and maintenance, since ICF concrete forms do not rot like wood. Since the steel is encased in concrete, it won't corrode, either.
- No toxic materials are used when making ICFs, meaning reduced emissions and healthier air inside the building.

With many options on the market for building materials, deciding which one to choose can be difficult. Wood frame construction, structural insulated panels, concrete masonry units, and tilt-up construction all have their pros and cons, but none bring the same mix of features as ICF block construction.

Insulated concrete forms combine ease of use, exceptional strength, and long-lasting durability to make the value proposition for using them hard to beat. ICF blocks are so easy to install that the labor is often lower than in traditional construction projects.

ICF should be at the top of the list for any new building projects.

Best Investment

Home = Happy

5 moments when you realize that a home is the best investment you can make in yourself.

There are decisions that change your everyday life forever. Buying your own home is one of them. JP Houser Choice is not just about choosing a place to live—it is a conscious investment in comfort, peace of mind, and the future.

1. When you feel the real space. This is the moment when you stop asking yourself “where will I fit in?” and start planning: a study, a hobby room, a playroom for the kids, or your own mini-spa.
2. When you take your first step in the garden. Private greenery – a place for family dinners under the clouds, safe play for children, or relaxation on a deck chair after work. It's your piece of nature that you return to every day.
3. When you appreciate peace and quiet. Unlike apartment blocks or large housing estates, there are no crowds here, just an intimate green space where you really feel at home.
4. When you see the difference in your quality of life. Healthier air and the knowledge that your home is the best place to live.
5. When you think about the future. A home is not just about today's comfort. It is also an investment in real estate that appreciates over time, providing financial stability for you and your loved ones.

The best investment is one that brings true happiness.

With JP Houser Choice, you can have it all.
